On the front lines: Panarese starting to see good results

She needed to get on a ventilator quickly, and the medical team rushed into place with one of the machines as the woman's breathing got more and more labored.

Ready to intubate her, Everett's Allen Panarese paused as the woman looked up to him with worried eyes - clearly very sick and also very afraid she might never speak again.

She was afraid she would die, and Panarese - who is also a long-time School Committeeman in Everett was her lone source of comfort at the moment as he also worked to save her

"One of my patients, before she was put on the machine, she looked at me and said, 'Am I going to die?"" he told the Independent. "I looked at her and said, 'Not today you're not.' She ended up actually being the first patient at the hospital to successfully come off the Ward 1 School Committeeman Allen Panarese has been known by many as a member of the Everett School Committee for several years. However, he has also been a respiratory therapist for 41 years, most of the time at CHA Everett. He has been on the front lines for the last eight weeks, and said he definitely is seeing a light at the end of the tunnel.

Everett shops keeps MBTA system stocked with sanitizer

By Seth Daniel

When the MBTA faced the COVID-19 crisis, the first thing that had to be done was to provide employees with ways to protect themselves, including hand sanitizer.

However, in March, that was nearly impossible as there was a run on hand sanitizer and little to none could be found through the traditional supply channels.

On Monday, MBTA General Manager Steve Poftak told the Fiscal Management Control Board (FMCB) they decided to bring the operation in-house at the Everett Shops on Lower Broadway. Not being able to get normal quantities, the MBTA ordered in bulk and took delivery of 12, 55-gallon drums of hand sanitizer one month ago.

Now, MBTA employees have formed their own distribution network.

"We have bulk sanitizer which we are refilling into bottles at our Everett Shops and distributing to our employees and at all the stations," said Poftak. "We collect all the empty sanitizer bottles and bring them in and deliver them to

Baker extends stay at home advisory, closure of non-essential businesses until May 18

By Lauren Bennett

Governor Charlie Baker on Tuesday afternoon extended the stay at home advisory and closure of non-essential businesses until May 18. The original order was set to expire on May 4.

Additionally, Baker extended the ban on gatherings of 10 or more people until May 18.

"I know pushing these dates back a couple of weeks is probably not what many people want to hear," Baker said at Tuesday's press conference, but he said that there are "risks associated with going back too soon.'

He said that the measures the state has taken so far with the stay at home advisory and increased testing, among other things, have helped to flatten the curve in the Commonwealth. He added that while hospitalization rates have begun to plateau, they have not yet started to fall with the intensity that would suggest a serious decrease in cases. "We're moving in the right direction with respect to the virus, but ww are not where we need to be," Baker said. "These mechanisms all need to remain in place."

He thanked the people of Massachusetts for "playing their part" in limiting the spread of the virus. He said he recognizes how difficult the state's decisions have been on people and fami-

Everett Community Care Fund to distribute first checks Thursday

A little help

By Seth Daniel

The Everett Community Care Fund will hold its first distribution of funds to 100 families on Thursday cutting checks to utility companies and phone companies for $200 each to help those most affected by the pandemic.

The Fund launched late last week and is run in coniunction with the United Way, five community partners and the City of Everett.

On Thursday, Latinos United in Massachusetts (LUMA) will be giving out the checks to approved families – all of whom have to be Everett residents and have been vetted by a com-

"When we talked to people in the community, rent and bills are the big areas they need help now," said Lucy Pineda, director of LUMA. "With food, there is a shortage now, but there are a lot of services already happening with different organizations in the city."

With an application pool of 300, and $20,000 to help 100 families, Pineda said they had to make careful decisions. All applicants had to fill out a form with basic information and also whether they are working

Class of 2020 look past graduation, hopeful to be on campus in September

By Seth Daniel

Ahmed Alananzeh's family had been waiting for graduation since coming to America - watching three previous children go through Everett High and all just missing the top spot.

This year, Alananzeh and his family were set to enjoy hearing him give the valedictorian speech at Everett Memorial Stadium - videotaping the speech and sending it viral to so many family and friends online. It was the moment they had all been waiting for, he said.

Now, it likely isn't going to happen at all, and even more so. Alananzeh is more worried about being able to start college at Yale University on campus this fall – as he heard last week that the fall semester could be on-

"I think my family is more hurt than I am now," said Alananzeh on Monday in a Zoom call with two other seniors. "I'm the fourth and youngest in the family and all of us graduated from Everett High. I was the first one to be valedictorian and now they don't get to hear that valedictorian speech. That was going to be recorded and would have gone all over social media. This is why we came to the U.S. - soone of us could excel. They really wanted to have that moment, to see me give the speech and have my name called. I think it's something they had hoped for over many years." Now that opportunity appears more and more like it won't happen, and seniors or not, and if they are receiving support from other organizations.

"Based on that information, we decided which families would get approval," she said. "On Thursday, they will come pick up their checks. It will be under the name of the provider – the utility company or phone company. They will just send this check to the company with their regular bill. In doing that, we'll help 100 families. However, we have 300 applicants so 200 families are on a waiting list for another round of funding if it is available."

Mayor Carlo DeMaria last week announced the establishment of the HY-PERLINK "https://unitedwaymassbay.org/covid-19/ local-funds/everett/" Everett Community Care Fund in partnership with United Way of Massachusetts Bay and Merrimack Valley. Seeded with a $100,000 challenge match grant from United Way, the Everett Community Care Fund has mobilized resources for emergency assistance to households who are financially impacted, with a focus on those who are most economically vulnerable during the COVID-19 pandemic. The fund will deploy resources through five local nonprofit partners to prevent financial crises and displacement for the residents of Everett.

"Many lives have been disrupted as a result of the COVID-19 pandemic," said Mayor DeMaria. "While the health of our residents is paramount; the financial burden that many face isn't far behind. The need for resources in Everett will continue to grow, I'm thankful to United Way for their assistance and generous seed fund to get us started. I would encourage all of those who are able to donate to help a friend, family member, or neighbor that may be struggling during this time."

To kick off the effort, United Way provided $100,000 to the Everett Community Care Fund. Grants of $20,000 each were distributed to Mystic Valley Elder Services, La Communidad, Everett Haitian Community Center, Latinos Unidas en Massachusetts (LUMA) and Eliot Community Human Services. All of them, including LUMA, are now working to get the money into the right hands.

As COVID-19 reverberates across hospitals, offices, schools, and homes, many in Everett are being impacted in ways they never imagined a month ago. Businesses who make up the backbone of Everett's local economy have significantly reduced their hours or have been forced to close. People who are not paid if they are not working are trying to figure out how they will make ends meet. The Everett Community Care Fund was established to mobilize those who can give to do so in support of their neighbors.

"As we all struggle to cope with COVID-19 in our homes and in our communities, we can also act -- to help others," said Michael K. Durkin, President and Chief Executive Officer at United Way of Massachusetts Bay and Merrimack Valley. "United Way is proud to partner with Mayor DeMaria and community leaders in Everett to help meet the basic needs of individuals, children and families during this unprecedented crisis.'

The Everett Community Care Fund will focus on the basic needs of families. Priority will be given to those who are most economically vulnerable to this crisis. All donations will be collected by United Way and distributed by established Everett nonprofit organizations with a track record of administering assistance funds. These funds will cover the costs of essential needs including, but not limited to, rent, food, utilities, childcare, medications, and other basic necessities.

Tess Kohanski, who typically works in the City's Economic Development office, has been working to get the fund underway. She said it is important to know that the funding is specifically for Everett residents and that is checked thoroughly. Also, she said there is no requirement for residents to prove citizenship, so anyone from Everett is invited to apply to any of the five organizations without fear of immigration consequences.

All gifts are tax-deductible and 100 percent of the proceeds (net credit card fees) will go to individuals seeking assistance via nonprofits already working in Everett. Donations can be made by credit card or through a donor advised fund online or by sending a check to United Way of Massachusetts Bay, PO Box 51381, Boston, MA 02205-1381. Please make checks out to "United Way of Massachusetts Bay" and include "Everett Covid-19 Care Fund" in the memo of said that after Gov. Charlie Baker's cancellation of the in-person school year one week ago, the mood of the class has gone from hopeful Alananzeh and seniors Chloe Lewis and Melisa Demaku said there was no real surprise in that decision, but the real downer has been the uncertainty with colleges. Alananzeh committed to Yale some time ago, and had hoped to take a visit in April or May, but that isn't allowed. Demaku – choosing between Wellesley College and Salem State - said she is at a standstill in her college decision, mostly because she can't see the campus, talk to students or visit with

For all three, the hope now isn't so much about high school, but rather about college in the fall.

"I found out orientation for freshman (at UMass-Lowell) is going to be online too," she said. "In July I have to do the whole orientation from home. I don't even get to do that."

Said Demaku, "A lot of the colleges I've gotten into e-mailed me to say there is a very good possibility that my first semester could be online. They want the students to know that before the commit and pay their deposits...I still haven't committed to a college yet. That's hard to do now because I haven't been able to see the campuses or meet alumni. A lot of the college deadlines to apply are pushed back to June 1 so I'm not too worried...I know a lot of my teachers graduated from Salem State and I want to be a teacher. Wellesley is a good college too though."

Alananzeh recalls thinking he would finish up his senior year, celebrate with his family, visit Yale and then prepare to settle on campus in the late summer. That is all up in the air now, and he said he is facing the reality of starting his college career at an Ivy League School in his parent's base-

"I committed early and I've only driven through Connecticut to get to New York and New Jersey, and I never got to see the campus," he said. "I'm hoping this all ends soon because the orientation is late August. I wanted to make a few friends when I got to campus. I want the full college experience in the fall. It's not the same at home learning...Right now, I just hope college is open by the time fall rolls around."

Such has been the pattern of expectations for the Class of 2020 as the last eight weeks have transpired. Many have gone from the shock of seeing school closed until late April, to seeing the seriousness of the virus take hold, to letting go of the idea of having prom and senior week (and possibly graduation), to now simply hoping they can start their college lives in the fall on campus rather than online.

It has been the potential loss of graduation (which isn't yet officially cancelled, but seniors don't feel optimistic) that has been the hardest thing for these seniors and their families to accept. "I live right next to the Stadium; I can see it from my window," said Demaku. "I grew up always seeing graduation and it was a big deal for me. My parents are immigrants. They came to the U.S. for my sister and I. Graduation is a big deal for them. They were excited for it. I feel really bad because they want to be able to hear my name called like they did for my sister, who graduated Everett High in

Said Lewis, "My parents are really upset. I'm the oldest of six kids. My dad didn't finish high school and it's a highlight for them because I've done really well in high school. They've been really looking forward to celebrating with me. They feel for me and are sad."

Other things are also laughable misses.

"I never got to skip school," said Alananzeh, who has perfect attendance since the 7th grade. "I came to school sick too."

But even being "robbed in broad daylight," as one said, none of the class wants to be remembered for the last three months of the school year. Rather, they would like to be remembered for the previous three years and seven months.

"I want to be remembered as being the best class," said Lewis. "I fell throughout high school we were always told we were an amazing class and one of the best ever at Everett High. We had a lot of great accomplishments before this happened. It's unfortunate we'll be remembered mostly as the class that got its senior year taken away."

Added Demaku, "Everyone has a right to complain, but honestly this has made me appreciate more what I did experience in high school over the years."

we've avoided the humanitarian crisis we've seen... elsewhere around the world," he said. The Baker-Polito administration also announced the creation a 17-member reopening advisory board that will work together on a plan to reopen the state.

Lt. Governor Karyn Polito said that government officials, industry employees, and customers "will need to work together for this to be successful." She said that Massachusetts is "recognized as a leader in people taking personal responsibility" for social distancing.

"The board will bring a range of perspectives, including an understanding of workplaces and workforces, including insights" into things like education, local governance, manufacturing, and transportation.

She said it will be "a lot of listening" to main streets businesses and other small businesses, as well as metro mayors and local government officials statewide, and the 17 member board will be comprised of three public health officials, 11 leaders from businesses, including transportation secretary Stephanie Pollock.

"Their insight is key," Polito said. "A lot of the decisions we will make need to be enforced and implemented at the local level." She said the first meeting of the advisory board took place on April 28. Testing Increases And Regular

Hospital Capacity

As of April 27, Massachusetts had 56,462 confirmed cases of COVID-19, and 3,003 people had died.

Governor Baker also made several announcements late last week and early this week regarding increases in testing across the state. He said he was "ramping up" a program for testing with Quest Diagnostics in a number of community health centers across the state.

He also said that important factors when analyzing test results are how many people are tested, how many come up positive, and what the ratio between those two numbers looks like. Baker also talked about the importance of seeking medical care if people are experiencing serious symptoms like chest pain or difficulty breathing. He said that hospitals across the state are equipped to deal with illnesses and conditions not related to COVID-19, such as stroke, cancer, and injuries, and people should not be afraid to go to the hospital if it is necessary to do so.

"If you're not feeling well, if you have an ongoing medical condition, stay in touch with your clinicians," Baker said on April 24. "If you need to go to the hospital, go." On April 24, Department of Public Health Commissioner Monica Bharel returned to Baker's daily press coference to speak about her personal experience with COVID-19. Now recovered, she described her battle with the virus as including fever and muscle aches, but she still worked from home when she felt up

Community non-profits could play a role in mental health restoration for Latino communities

By Seth Daniel

As the pandemic continues to rage within the communities of Everett, Chelsea and Revere, every day it becomes more apparent how much more the virus impacts communities of color than other racial

This is particularly being shown to be true in the Latino community – whether it is documented or undocumented immigrants, and even those that are citizens.

One Mass General researcher told a teleconference sponsored by the Robert Wood Johnson Foundation last week that now is the time for communities and medical providers to prepare for the psychological impacts on Latino families that will begin to show up in the coming months.

"We should be ready for the post-mental health challenges that will come after the virus, particularly in Latino families," said Dr. Margarita Alegria, one of the country's preeminent experts on racial and ethnic disparities and chief of the Disparities Research Unit at MGH. "There is such psychological stress from foreclosure, job loss, sickness, and it brings on depression, anxiety and substance abuse. This psychological stress is higher on low-income people and intensifies their risk. We need to be prepared for all this, especially in vulnerable populations where they may have job loss and were already challenged economically...It would be tragedy to have another wave of death due to these disparities and we are not "There is a real opportunity to be ready and to serve Latino and minority families," she continued. While other communities of color, such as Black/ African American populations have also suffered from COVID-19 disproportionately, Alegria said it was particularly the Latino community that is most at risk due to the fear and anxiety over losing housing, over immigration status and over the new public charge rules. The public charge rules are a branch of immigration law that began to be enforced again this year, and it prohibits legal immigrants from accessing government benefits for a period of time - with grave consequences for their citizen sponsors if they do.

"What we have seen on the ground for undocumented families is that it's even harder for them because they aren't being recognized for receiving benefits from the government," she said. "Families are very, very afraid to go forward, whether it is for reporting domestic violence or even going to medical facilities for testing because they feel information will be used against them for public charge or to deport them. People don't want to talk about information or about being sick or giving information.'

She said there are also reports of landlords throwing undocumented families out if they think one or more of them has gotten sick with COVID-19, despite the many protections put in place by the courts and lawmakers.

All of that has primed the Latino community for severe mental health and anxiety challenges in the coming months – challenges that could exacerbate the current situation in large immigrant communities like Everett, Chelsea and Revere.

Alegria said now is the time that the state and federal government should focus on non-profits in the communities - ones that those on the fringes or in Latino communities trust. It is there, in association with local health centers, that Alegria believes early and frequent mental health check-ups can ease the problem.

"Making money from federal stimulus packages to these community-based organizations is important and I would advocate doing that," she said. "I would advocate training workers at these community-based organizations to offer mental health counseling under the supervision of clinicians and primary care providers. That could be the way to go. We have done this before when we used community-based organizations in other situations. These are the places people trust and will turn to when they won't go to a medical facil-

She said the key would be accessing federal monies for such a program and making sure the proper training is put in place.

"These workers and staff members would be supervised and trained by clinicians," she said. "It's doable, but we need to make sure resources are going to these community-based organizations and make sure they are received for these services."

These organizations in local communities could perform in-person visits - perhaps in association with a Food Pantry - or they could be trained to do tele-health appointments and check-ins. Many of these organizations, she said, have already been on the front lines of Latino communities and have been helping residents with food, diapers and living expenses. They have built up tremendous trust, Alegria said, in a way that a health center or hospital has not. To tap into that trust to treat mental health in the coming months could be a tremendous help for adults and children in those communities who are going to suffer from the trauma of the last eight weeks.

If situations and symptoms are too difficult for simple counseling, the association with clinicians at a local health center could be used for support - as a referral where a trusted person relays the patient to a more qualified physician.

"We know we need to get them mental health supports early on," said Alegria. "In past epidemics and recessions the people who do well have emergency mental health supports and ongoing maintenance afterward."

machine and I'm so happy for that. We found out a few other patients have also been able to stop the machine. There is a light at the end of the tunnel."

Many in Everett will know Panarese from the Everett School Committee, where he commonly sits around the semi-circle with other members debating school policy and discussing budget expenditures. He has been there for some time, but not nearly as long as he has worked as a respiratory therapist at CHA Everett – formerly the Whidden Hospital. Panarese has worked 41 years as a respiratory therapist, most of them at the CHA Everett hospital. He has been on the front lines at the hospital for weeks now - working days at a time in between short breaks at home.

"It's just non-stop," he said. "What the news says how bad it is, it's that and then some. You get waves of patients with it. Things can be slower and then it just comes in waves. It's weighing the staff down, but you keep going because you have to. It's draining and you're tired, but it's your job and you do it... This week, we're starting to see a little slowdown and that's great. We're at the peak now and hopefully it will start to go down...It's a lot of long hours and it's not just physically exhausting, it's emotionally exhausting fascinated him. Watching him work all over the hospital – whether in the ER, the ICU or on the regular floor - he was convinced that was what he wanted to do as a profession. Soon after, he had finished his studies and got a job at the Whidden Hospital. After a few stints at hospitals in Boston, he returned to CHA Everett 17 years ago - and has spent a majority of his 41-year-career working on hospital hill in Everett.

For COVID-19, it's something that in all those years he's never encountered. That goes for pretty much everyone else too, he "This virus is like nothing we've ever seen before," he said. "It's just terrible. It's certainly nothing like I've ever seen in the past. It's a hard virus to beat. It's concerning to see people who don't take it seriously; they don't want to get this. It has no discrimination in any way, and age doesn't matter. We're seeing kids there in their 20s and 30s and we see 50 year old's too. You have to be very cautious with this."

Most of the patients Panarese said he sees have been sick two or three weeks, some of them on a ventilator for that long. The CHA Everett can handle about 10 to 12 patients on ventilators at a time, he said. If things get pushed beyond that, they have been able to transfer patients to hospitals in Boston with more capacity. That has been very helpful, as the Everett hospital is a magnet for communities all over the area - including Everett, Revere, Chelsea,

of the Mystic/Tobin Bridge. Right now, Panarese said he has been working 12-hour stints on the overnight shift. Often times, they have been so busy at the shift change that he has opted to stay on for another two hours. It's a pace that - even though the hospital took the virus very seriously - they could not have predicted.

"I don't think any of us thought it would be like this," he said. "We knew it would be very serious, but it's kind of over the top. All the staff, from doctors to nurses, to the respiratory therapists and the cleaning crews - everyone has stepped up and doing the best they can. For the size we are - a little hospital we're doing a great job." At the moment, Panarese said there is very little thought in the medical community about "going back" and he said there likely isn't going to be the kind of normal people once knew only a few months ago. There will be changes, he said, and he said some of them could be for the best.

"People have to understand they have to pay attention to the restrictions and to social distance," he said. "They can't go back to what they did in large groups. It's going to change everything. I think people will appreciate life a little more. People are together more now and doing things together as a family without staring at a phone screen. Hopefully, we'll see the end of this and people can go back to a semi-normal life, and we'll will be closer as families and as a community."

DiDomenico and McGonagle announce virtual notarization

Senator Sal DiDomenico and Representative Joseph McGonagle recently announced that the Massachusetts Legislature passed legislation to authorize notary publics to perform notary actions using video conferencing during the COVID-19 public health emergency. "My office heard from many constituents on this issue of remote notarization, and I am pleased that my colleagues in the Legislature and I were able to enact this change," said Senator DiDomenico. "Industries across our Commonwealth are having to quickly adapt to these unprecedented times, and the Legislature is doing everything we can to identify these needs and make the necessary changes. Public health and safety must remain top priority, and this will help minimize risk for many people in need of this critical service and ease the burden on a crucial part of our economy."

Said McGonagle, "With

so much technology at our disposal, it only makes sense that we take advantage of it to maintain normal life routines while keeping public health and safety at the forefront of our priorities. As this pandemic is ongoing, we must continue to find ways to modify work practices and push forward. Remote notarization will take the pressure off many who are dealing with major decisions during this time. I think leadership, especially Speaker DeLeo and Chair Michlewitz, have done a great job identifying and addressing the needs of the Commonwealth."

The legislation applies requirements for authorized notary publics to use electronic video conferencing for documents requiring notarization including those related to a mortgage or other conveyance of title to real estate, will, nomination of guardian or conservator, caregiver authorization affidavit, trust, durable power of attorney, or health

The legislation includes the following provisions, which will be in place until three business days after termination of the March 10, 2020 declaration of a State of Emergency:

•Authorizes a notary public appointed under the laws of the Commonwealth to perform an acknowledgement, affirmation or other notarial act using video conferencing in real

•Makes valid notarial acts using video conferencing when the notary public and each principal are physically located within the Commonwealth as well as other provisions;

 Requires notaries to record the video conference and retain a copy of the conference; and related documentation for 10 years.

The bill, which is the latest action by the Legislature to address the COVID-19 public health crisis and its effects on Massachusetts, has been sent to the Governor's desk.

ALLOWING THE STATES TO GO BANKRUPT IS A REALLY BAD IDEA

One of the most glaring shortcomings thus far of the stimulus and disaster packages that have been passed by Congress in response to the COVID-19 pandemic has been the failure to provide assistance to the states.

Every state in the nation is seeing its revenues plummet to never-before-experienced depths. However, of the trillions of dollars thus far appropriated by Congress, there is barely a penny for state government operations -- and by extension, municipalities -- which are carrying the battle against the pandemic on the front lines.

The states thus are caught in an ever-tightening vise of plunging tax revenues on the one hand and skyrocketing costs on the other.

Despite the obvious squeeze on state budgets, Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell last week commented, in response to a question about whether the Congress soon would be aiding the states, that he believed it would be preferable for states and municipalities to declare bankruptcy than for the federal government to provide needed funding to close their budget gaps.

It is hard to fathom why somebody of McConnell's stature would make such a statement, other than to give voice to the general Republican creed that disdains government operations at all levels. In particular, the GOP has immense dislike for what it considers to be overly-generous pension plans for state and municipal union employees.

However, the reason why states are in such desperate fiscal trouble these days has nothing to do with their pension or budget policies, but specifically is linked to the coronavirus, which has had a devastating financial impact on every facet of commerce, including state budgets.

Questions regarding the pension plans of the states as a

Questions regarding the pension plans of the states as a contributor to their overall fiscal soundness certainly can be debated, but this is not the time to do so amidst this unprecedented crisis.

State and municipal governments across the country provide the first line of response for every American in protecting our health and welfare, so it makes no sense to allow states and municipalities to fail in this mission at this critical juncture amidst a pandemic that threatens to extend for many months.

In addition, without funding from the federal government, state and local governments will be forced to make layoffs of police, firefighters, teachers, and others in order to balance their budgets, a situation that will exacerbate even further the national unemployment rate.

Finally, the effect on the bond market from a plethora of state and municipal bankruptcies could have far-reaching and long-lasting negative effects for the country and the economy.

In short, there is nothing good that can come out of state and municipal bankruptcies at this time; but there is a lot

Mitch McConnell's opinions are a grotesque perversion of responsible government. Hopefully, the rest of the Congress will not go along with his extreme and destructive ideas.

THE SAFE WAY ... TO CELEBRATE MAY DAY

GUEST OP-ED

Fighting for the frontline

By Maura Healey

than 300,000 More health care workers and first responders in Massachusetts have stepped up to the frontlines in the battle against COVID-19. They suit up in scrubs or uniforms, leave the comfort of their homes, and put their lives at risk to keep us, our families, friends, and neighbors safe. We have an obligation to do everything we can to make sure they have access to the support they need during a time when they are sacrificing so much. That's why my office has launched FrontlineMA. org—a one-stop shop for frontline workers to get the information on resources they need during this crisis.

From Pittsfield to Provincetown, and from Newburyport to New Bedford, our frontline workers are putting in countless hours to combat this pandemic. Thankfully, many businesses, state agencies, and individuals have stepped up to help provide housing, personal protective equipment (PPE), and meals to make lives easier for them. This website provides a centralized place to get information on those resources.

For health care workers who may be exposed and can't be with their families, we've compiled resources for alternative housing so they can have a place to stay and minimize the risks for their families in case they become infected.

For parents who are working essential jobs and are struggling to find a safe place for their kids, we've put everything in one place to ensure they can continue to access childcare.

And to protect our heroes and honor people like Officer Jose Fontanez, who lost his life to COVID-19 while keeping our communities safe, we're working with stakeholders to secure PPE. I encourage health care facilities and providers, police and fire departments, and state and county agencies to consult the resources we've put together to get first responders and frontline workers the protective gear and information they need.

We've also compiled details on priority testing sites, tips for self-care, guidance on self-isolation and quarantine, and a list of free and discounted meals so that our health care workers, first responders, and their families can stay informed, safe, and healthy.

In addition to providing frontline workers with essential information, we want to make sure they know how much our communities appreciate and support them. That's why we created a Hero Wall where people can post pictures and send messages to thank our heroes and our frontline workers can share their own messages. I encourage everyone to post pictures of their sidewalk chalk or window art, or just a kind note, to say thank you to our nurses, doctors, healthcare workers and first responders. Throughout the site, you'll see opportunities to chip in, by providing a meal or two, providing a safe place for workers to stay in between shifts, volunteering, or donating PPE.

Just like all of us, I'm thankful for our frontline workers who bravely show up and risk their lives every day to combat this pandemic and keep us safe.

We're grateful for our partners at HubSpot and IDEO who helped make this website possible, and for the invaluable input from healthcare providers and police and fire associations in making sure this website is the most effective for our frontline. We'll continue to update it as new information becomes avail-

To our frontline workers, please use FrontlineMA. org as a resource during this battle. And to everyone else, stay home, stay safe, and thank a hero.

Science Matters

By Jack Clarke

Either science matters or it doesn't. Policy makers can't have it both ways and selectively apply it only when it advances a political agenda.

Science should inform and drive public policy not the other way around - this is especially true when it comes to the health of the American people.

In the case of the coronavirus pandemic and the climate change crisis, nowhere is the advancement of science more important. Lives depend on its accuracy, use and availability.

According to NASA scientists, 97 percent or more of published climate scientists agree that climate-warming trends over the past century are "likely due to human activities." Yet the President calls it a hoax and, along with many in Congress, refuses to believe the science. On the national level, denying what science teaches us about the short and longterm consequences of climate change will have dire consequences for this and future generations.

Scientists from the Intergovernmental Panel on

Climate Change (IPCC) tell us that failure to take the climate emergency seriously now will result in lives lost as sea level rise accelerates, storms get stronger, droughts and fires increase, and the days get hotter. This fact is also acknowledged by scientists in many other federal agencies, including the Defense Department.

While America and the world grapples with the coronavirus, climate scientists and health experts forecast threats from additional infectious diseases spurred on by rising temperatures.

Mosquito-driven illnesses like dengue fever, West Nile, and Zika will become more common this century, they warn us, as the insects that transmit them expand their habitat range.

The World Health Organization (WHO) predicts that between 2030 and 2050, climate change is expected to cause approximately a-quarter-million additional deaths per year world-wide from malnutrition, malaria, diarrhea and heat stress. And, as we are seeing from the coronavirus, no one is immune from those diseases appearing in the US, we need to start addressing the public health emergency of climate change and limit the spread of these afflictions – and we're not.

Dr. Kristie Ebi, a climate and public health scientist at the University of Washington and an IPCC contributor says she's "worried we're not prepared" - She's not the only one.

"The Lancet," a journal that "make(s) science widely available so that medicine can serve, and transform society," recently launched its "Countdown" project to provide an independent, global scientific monitoring system tracking the health dimensions of climate change. It views climate change as this century's "biggest public health threat."

As with the coronavirus, we are all vulnerable to the public health impacts of climate change. Some, however, are more vulnerable than others and minority communities, pregnant women, children and the elderly will suffer disproportionately.

from at home and around the world who predicted the current pandemic and it wasted January and February playing down the threat from the new virus.

Like the science of climate change, the President called the pandemic a political hoax, even though medical science informed the WHO's decision to declare the outbreak a global public health emergency at the end of January. The White House was informed of its potential consequences on January 5th.

Now, America's confirmed cases of Covid-19 are unnecessarily the highest in the world with nearly 800,000 infected and 42,500 dead – thousands of which could likely have been prevented if the science was taken seriously.

The World Economic Forum recently recognized the relationship between the climate change crisis and coronavirus and reported that a "global-to-local response and long-term thinking" is needed with responses guided by science and "the political will to make fundamental changes when faced with (these)

Initial online ZBA meeting features lots of participation, first official vote

By Seth Daniel

It didn't come without some hiccups, but the first Zoning Board of Appeals (ZBA) meeting was deemed a success last Tuesday night, April 21, with the City's first official online approval of a project taking place.

The ZBA had a full quorum of members in a City-organized Zoom meeting that was accessible on several formats and by phone.

The meeting began rather smoothly, with new Chair Mary Gerace taking charge of the meeting with several members online and ready to participate.

The first matter on the docket was the request from Luis Flores to locate an auto repair shop at 357 Third St., which is a scrap yard now and is in the newly-zoned Commercial Triangle District.

Flores explained he had an existing five-year lease with the owner to operate the new repair and auto body shop, a lease that began before COVID-19 and has languished as the City and other bodies have tried to get up and running with meetings. He explained that he used to have a shop in Medford, and it had a great clientele. Then, he moved some time ago to Plaistow, NH, but his clients didn't follow - hurting the business. Coming back to the area in Everett will jumpstart the business, he said.

Most of the members saw no problem with it, and neither did any City officials who were involved in the online meeting.

It was approved by a vote of 5-0 – the City's first online approval of the COVID-19 era.

However, there was an immediate problem as Councilor Michael Mc-Laughlin had wanted to read a statement from abutters against the plan, and he had his own concerns. McLaughlin was not able to get online to the meeting in time to register those concerns prior to the vote. Apparently, there had been two access links and phone numbers given out - with several elected officials getting the wrong number.

Later, McLaughlin said he had concerns with the placement of an auto shop in the new Commercial Triangle zoning district. That district was meant to showcase new residential, office and research development and to discourage auto repair and scrap yards, Mc-Laughlin said.

His objection and the incorrect log-in information led to a great deal of legal difficulties, with Attorney Robin Stein of KP Law advising the members of the implications of voting a matter if everyone wasn't able to access the public meeting.

A recess in the meeting then proceeded for more than 10 minutes as they discussed the "new" problem. It was decided in the end that the issue was not enough to rescind the vote and call off the meeting which was a possibility that was discussed during the board's attention was Oliveira's Restaurant owner Wilson Rangel, of Saugus, who was petitioning to make a 3-family into a 4-family at 810 Broadway. Currently, an insurance office has occupied a firstfloor space, and Rangel hoped to convert it into a fourth living unit.

He said he plans to have his employees from the restaurant live there after doing some construction on the property – which has only one existing lease.

Members requested that he restrict residential parking permits on the property, which he agreed to do. It was approved 5-0.

•A petition for 15-17 Argyle St. was continued when members of the ZBA told Attorney Anthony Rossi that they had issues with the parking plans for the conversion of the property from a two-family to a three-family. Constantino Pannullo and family, who live outside of Everett in Revere and Medford, had suggested a parking plan in the back with new spaces added to an existing lot.

Members Michael Dantone and Gerace had issues with the layout.

"I went down there and I can't see how it will work," said Dantone. "It's a mess down there. I see trouble all over this plan. I have great concerns."

Said Gerace, "I'm also very concerned about them getting out. It's very tight and a family neighborhood. I don't see how it will work." The matter was unanimously tabled until the May 4 meeting, with Attorney Rossi committing to revamp the parking.

•A plan put forth by the DiCarlo family for a property they bought at 83-85 Linden St. last year was approved, but only after extensive conversation about not allowing residential parking stickers.

Nadia DiCarlo explained their family has several properties in Everett and are conscientious landlords in the city. They purchased the property almost one year ago only to discover that the eight-unit building was actually a six-unit building on paper. The two units that existed in the basement for 40 years were never legally registered.

"Nothing is changing here," said DiCarlo. "We only want to affirm what we're being taxed as which is an eight family."

There are eight parking

Wearing masks for safety, the DiCarlo family discussed their proposed conversion of a property on Linden Street with the ZBA. It was approved after discussions about parking spots for the eight units, and as has become standard, the ZBA asked that as a condition, no more parking sticker permits would be allowed at the building. That was a stumbling block for about 20 minutes for the owners, who hadn't heard of that condition being put on most applications.

In the end, they agreed to it. The conversion was allowed by a vote of 5-0. Two items were also tabled at the meeting until a later date:

•Rex-E. LLC wishes to convert the former Little Caesar's pizza store on Broadway at the City Line into a nine-unit, three story residential building. The matter is still being discussed at the Planning Board and was tabled at the

•A move by Eduardo Matosinho to build a second structure on the lot at 28-30 Carlson St. was tabled. Currently, a two-family home exists on the 5,814 sq. ft. lot and he would like to build another residence on the lot as well. It was tabled until the next meeting.

ZBA Chair Mary Gerace convenes the first online ZBA meeting on April 21. After an initial hiccup, the meeting ran smoothly and contained three votes of the Board.

Online schooling plan being worked out this week; school meal site back in service

By Seth Daniel

The Everett Public Schools (EPS) has been working diligently this week to work towards unveiling a full distance learning plan for the district to finish out the current school term, and said they hope to have that plan available by the end of the week.

Many parents over the April Break last week have been looking for clarity as to how the district would move forward with online schooling since Gov. Charlie Baker's announcement last week closing all schools for in-person classes.

Supt. Priya Tahiliani said they had been working on two types of plans, one that would have made allowances for returning to school and another that would have carried on to the end of the school term.

With the governor's announcement, the latter was fully in play. Last Friday, the state Department of Elementary and Secondary Education (DESE) released guidance to all districts in the state about how to construct those learning plans, and this week the EPS has been fully involved in making those plans.

'We are working diligently to provide the answers and clarity that students and families seek,' said Tahiliani. "In the past few days, DESE put out new recommendations for remote learning models that can best support our students through this extended closure. We are integrating their recommendations into joint guidance from the Everett Public Schools and the Everett Teachers Association that will be coming out by the end of this Plans for the new system of education through the end of the year will be available for every grade level, as well as special education and English Learners. Many of the students have already been learning online for more than one month, in what many are referring to as Phase 1 of the move to remote learning and instruction.

•Lunch Distributions On A New Schedule

This week, the food distribution program at Everett High and the Whittier School resumed after a two-week hiatus instituted by City government. However, now the meals program will take on a new schedule.

Starting on Tuesday, April 28, the Meals-To-Go program began operating from 11 a.m. to 2 p.m. at the two locations. That will continue two days per week from here on out. The days for distribution will now be Tuesdays and Fridays. Students at either location can receive multiple meals for the week, as well as printed learning packets. Th district noted that the printed materials are the same materials that are found on the EPS website, and If possible, they requested students access these materials online so they can avoid large crowds at the lunch sites.

•Chromebook home deliveries resume

For those who have rescheduled Chromebook deliveries, the district asks that people are home and readily available by phone at the designated time to receive the Chromebook.

If students have not yet scheduled a Chromebook delivery, please check the EPS website regularly as they will be posting additional time slots for delivery requests.

the Everett Shops – where they are disinfected, refilled and brought back to distributed back to the workforce again."

The system has been a game-changer and has provided plenty of sanitizer to the drivers and employees on the front lines helping people get back and forth to work during the pandemic – particularly those heading to work in health care jobs.

Officials said employees at the Everett Shops fill bottles ranging from 1 oz. to 4 oz. and to 6 oz. sizes. After disinfecting and refilling, they are labeled and sent back out.

So far, they have circulated 11,800 bottles from the Everett facility.

•RIDERSHIP DOWN SIGNIFICANTLY

Poftak said they are still maintaining a reduced service level on the T, but have seen ridership plummet – and there are budgetary implications to that which will have to be hammered out in working sessions throughout May prior to the submission of the MBTA Budget in late May.

"In general, we're maintaining the level of service we've provided the last two weeks, which is a modified Saturday schedule," he said. "We're seeing 20 percent of our typical ridership on the bus and 8 percent of our typical ridership on the subway. The Blue Line is the one outlier on subway service is at 13 percent of its typical ridership...Many of the individuals still using despite the lower numbers."

At this point, they are providing about 85,000 trips per day on the bus and about 40,000 trips per day

the services are health care workers and health care professionals so the T is providing a critical service on the subway. The MBTA has received approximately $827 million through the CARES Act to help them close the gaps in dropped ridership now and into the future. MBTA officials said they would need to use about $217 million of that right now to close the budget gaps for loss in revenues, but the number continues to grow and they must be prepared to have that funding on hand for the next fiscal year as well

- when ridership could continue to drop off

tinue to drop off.

MassDOT Secretary
Stephanie Pollack said the MBTA budget will need to be something that is more of a moving target than most budgets from past years. With so much up in the air, it will need to be
"reassessed and changed over time," she said.

Chair Joe Aiello said trying to pin down budget numbers now is very difficult given the uncertain times. He said it is important to remain flexible and ready to go if demand jumps. However, he said they need to be prepared if things don't bounce back to previous ridership levels.

"This is a little like throwing darts after your third beer," he said.

"In the end, it will be a decision made by others about the economy," he said. "Things could change on a moment's notice. There could be something happen on a Thursday or Friday and on Monday there is a huge demand for our services. We need to maintain operational flexibility and quick response flexibility. I'm less concerned in trying to get the numbers right. You have to think about being flexible to get through what is a very time with the virus and the economy."

WORKFORCE
As far as their own workforce goes, out of about 6,400 employees, there are 83 confirmed cases of COVID-19. Some 31 of those T workers have recovered and are cleared to go back to work. One worker, however, has passed away from the virus.

MBTA management has developed a five-tiered approach to testing among the workforce, with workers having the ability to be tested with other first responders at the state's facility outside Gillette Stadium in Foxboro.

If a worker has been potentially exposed to a positive case, they are notified and told to watch for symptoms. The same system is also being used for contractors, like the Keolis commuter rail.

•CROWDING ON THE

Despite the lower levels of usage on the T, there are still bus routes that are crowded at certain times of day. Those buses are monitored carefully and reinforcements are sent in so that buses don't get too crowded with people who don't have room to socially distance.

"We do actively monitor where we have crowding and full buses," Poftak said. "There is a button operators have to press if their bus is full."

That data is analyzed three times a day and reports are generated about where crowding occurs. When possible, other bus resources are dispatched to the overcrowded routes.

Using trash cans like this, the MBTA is collecting used bottles to be sent back to the Everett Shops for re-filling.

Due to the ongoing global health crisis surrounding the COVID-19 virus, the 2020 Agganis All-Star Games have been canceled.

While the games will not be played this year, the Agganis Foundation will award scholarships as scheduled.

"This is a very difficult announcement to make," said Paul Halloran, long-time executive director of the Agganis All-Star Games. "Even though it has been somewhat inevitable for the last several weeks, making it official is still extremely disappointing."

This year's Agganis All-Star Games were scheduled to be played June 21-25.

"We waited as long as we reasonably could before cancelling," Halloran said. "The shutdown came just after we would have been starting the selection process for players. It seems highly unlikely that there will be gatherings of any appreciable number of people two months from now."

Halloran said the foundation was waiting to see what would happen with spring sports, which were officially canceled last week when Gov. Charlie Baker announced that school buildings would not reopen before the fall.

"For a time, we were holding onto the hope that if there were an abbreviated spring season, maybe our games could in some way fill a gap, at least for the seniors who would have participated," Halloran said. "Sadly, that will not be the

There have been 58

Agganis All-Star Football Games (1956-58 and 1965-2019; the Polio Bowl, another All-Star football game, was played from 1959-64). A baseball game was added in 1995, followed by boys and girls soccer (1996), softball (1998), boys and girls basketball (2005) and boys and girls lacrosse (2012).

"We have had more than 10,000 student-athletes participate over the last 64 years," Halloran said. "We are proud of what Agganis Week has become, and we certainly look forward to bringing it back in 2021."

The primary mission of the Agganis Foundation is to award college scholarships to deserving high school seniors. Since 1958, when the first class of Agganis Scholars were named, the foundation has awarded $2,095,000 in scholarships to 984 student-athletes. This year's class will bring the number of recipients to more than 1,000.

"That is what we are most proud of," said Agganis Foundation President Andrew Demakes. "The legacy of Harry Agganis lives on in those who have been honored with a scholarship in his name. While we are truly disappointed to have to cancel this year's All-Star Games, we are pleased that another class of Agganis Scholars will be named."

The application process for Agganis scholarships has been ongoing since early March and the deadline for students to apply has been extended from April 30 to May 15, according to Scholarship Committee Chairman Tom Iarrobino.

"We thought with all the uncertainty these kids are going through this semester, we would give some extra time to submit their applications," Iarrobino said.

For the first time ever, the process for applying for an Agganis Scholarship is completely electronic, with access to the application available at agganisfoundation.com. Converting from a paper process could not have come at a better time.

"It would have been extremely challenging for students to track down paper copies of transcripts and letters of recommendation," Iarrobino said. "We have been thinking about moving to an electronic application for several years and, fortunately, picked this year to do it."

Scholarship winners will be notified by June 15 and will receive a $1,000 grant all four years they are in college. Demakes said the foundation is able to continue presenting scholarships thanks in part to the generosity of benefactors such as the Yawkey Foundation, which has donated more than $500,000 over the last 20 years.

"We are most grateful to the Yawkey Foundation and all those businesses and individuals that have supported our foundation over the years," Demakes said. "Thanks to them, we are able to invest in our future by helping out a group of very deserving students each year."

Mike Sainristil watched the NFL Draft as 10 Michigan teammates were selected

By Cary Shuman

When Everett football star Mike Sainristil chose Michigan, he knew that he was entering a preeminent college program that annually attracts the best players in the nation to Ann Arbor.

That fact was borne out in this year's NFL Draft as no less than 10 Michigan players were selected, second only to national champion LSU who had 14 players selected. A few other Michigan players were signed by teams as undrafted free agents.

Two of Sainristil's teammates, linebacker Josh Uche and offensive lineman, Michael Onwenu, were selected by the New England Patriots. Overall four Michigan offensive linemen were 2020 draft picks, making Wolverines' line coach Ed Warriner the Mike Milo of college football.

Sainristil, a freshman receiver, talked about his two U-M teammates who will be joining the Patriots. "The Patriots got great, hard-working guys," said Sainristil. "They'll give it their all for the team, real selfless guys. They're great team players and team leaders as well."

Sainrostil crossed pass

routes with Uche during some Michigan practices. "I went up against Uche a few times, not often because they didn't have him covering the slot [receiver] too many times in practice."

Sainristil described the 6-foot-3-inch, 350-pound Onwenu as "a big, strong guy who will lead his running backs through the hole for sure."

As for the entire offensive line being drafted, Sainristil said it was not a surprise. "Most definitely I expected them to be drafted. Everybody – Cesar [Ruiz], Jon [Runyan], Big Ben [Bredeson], Michael [Onwenu] - was a senior - and they're experienced guys who know the game of football very well, know their playbook and get their assignments done. We have one starting lineman, Jaylen Mayfield, who's back for his junior year."

Sainristil, the Massachusetts Gatorade Player of the Year in his senior year at Everett, said Michigan has long been known as a consistent producer of NFL draft picks and future stars. One prominent name that immediately comes to mind is former Michigan QB Tom Brady, who was a sixth-round pick in the 2000 NFL Draft and led the Patriots to six Super Bowl victories.

Interestingly, the quarter-back throwing the football to Sainristil this past season, senior Shea Patterson, an All-Big 10 third-team selection, went undrafted. Michigan wide receiver Donovan Peoples-Jones was selected in the sixth round by the Cleveland Browns.

Sainristil completed a successful season at Michigan with an appearance in the Vrbo Citrus Bowl in Orlando. Talk about a display of talent: There were 25 players on the two rosters who were either drafted by the NFL or signed as undrafted free agents.

Sainristil is back home with his parents, Carlot and Raymonde, and his family following the cancellation of classes at Michigan due to the coronavirus.

"There's no football right now but you just have to cope with it and take it day by day and hope the good news is sooner rather than later," he said.

Sainristil said candidly that he has thought about the prospect of playing in the NFL following his career at Michigan.

"You have to," he said. "I can't wait to see what the future holds."

MIAA announce spring sports and spring tournaments cancelled for the remainder of 2019-2020 School Year

In accordance with Governor Charles Baker's announcement that Massachusetts schools will be closed to in person learning for the remainder of the school year, the Massachusetts Interscholastic Athletic Association (MIAA) regretfully has cancelled all spring sports and spring tournaments.

The decision by the MIAA Board of Directors was difficult, disappointing, and one that was deferred for several weeks as Association staff, Association members from the Tournament Management Committee (TMC) and the Board worked aggressively to construct optional struc-

Research sample company looking for COVID-19 blood samples

By Soth Danie

A biological specimen company is calling out to all those who have COVID-19 or have recovered from the virus to donate blood immediately to help wage a scientific war on beating the virus

Specialty Biological Company (BSC) typically collects samples of several different diseases and sicknesses for the research community, including those in pharmacology, academia and the government. In normal times, one might go to one of their collection labs, such as in Medford, or at a health center. However, the company is responding to the immediate crisis, and huge request from researchers for COVID-19 samples, by changing its business model to collect blood samples from patients at their homes in a mobile collection unit.

"We need real diverse samples from diverse populations and in diverse stages of fighting the virus," said Lori Ball, chief operating officer of BSC. "We really need to spread the word as fast as we can because this is a pandemic and we have a pocket of time where this is really valuable information...This is the time right now to collect this and get the information while it's in process within the body."

Ball said their company collects samples, and then distributes them to the research community. Right now demand is at a tremendous high for them to get researchers valid and diverse samples so they can learn about the virus and try to develop a way to fight it.

Any samples collected will be used to develop diagnostics, or to learn about what COVID-19 is. They could also be used to study anti-bodies in the blood, which are immune system responses to fighting the disease. Researchers want to learn why some fight off the disease and others have trouble with it. Finally, they will use it to try to develop a vaccine so that no one ever gets COVID-19 again.

The only way to get to those important answers is to get samples of the virus from people who have it, thus the need to gather samples at their homes and to put out a public appeal for volunteers.

"Because of the nature of COVID, we realized that if there were those who wanted to donate, they might have a fever or might be in quarantine and might not be able to get out or don't feel well enough to get out," said Ball. "We changed our business model to include a mobile collection program so we could go to the home of COVID-19 patients. Our researchers were having trouble getting access to the research samples. That's what we do, get them samples, and we felt we needed to be able to go to any zip code where people have been diagnosed."

Because COVID-19 is a global pandemic, and there are few answers now, donating to research has become very popular because it is a humanitarian gesture to try to beat the virus. However, being able to get those samples at the right time was difficult given how sick people were who had the virus.

"Some people who

"Some people who have been diagnosed with COVID definitely want to participate in research and many of them are first-time donors," she said. "This is allowing them to connect with the research community right now. We are the conduit."

with COVID-19 and quarantined can now donate blood from the comfort of their home via a BSC mobile donation unit.

•When patients contact

Patients who are sick

BSC, they will be asked some qualifying questions to confirm their eligibility to participate.

•BSC is seeking blood donors who are over the age of 18 with COVID-19 positive test results confirmed by nasal swab or sera (blood test).

•Patients' personal information will be kept confidential and only health-related data will accompany their blood sample.

•They will be asked to provide demographic information such as age, race, gender, medications taken, co-morbidities, and smoking status in addition to answering questions about their illness such as symptoms and date of onset.\

•For their time, patients will be compensated $10 for each tube of blood collected.

Donating Blood In Quarantine

After a COVID-19 patient makes a blood donation appointment, a BSC phlebotomist, dressed in full personal protective equipment (PPE), will arrive at their home, explain the informed consent and collection process, and collect the blood sample. Then, they will send the sample to BSC's lab for processing and distribution.

Donating Blood Post Recovery

People who have recovered from COVID-19 and have had no symptoms for at least 28 days, and have had no close contact exposure to a person with confirmed COVID-19 for 28 days, can elect to either donate via the mobile service or make an appointment to visit a BSC blood donor center

BSC is a critical service supplying more than 30,000 pharma, biotech, diagnostic and government researchers with human blood products for scientific research.

Potential donors can obtain additional information and schedule an appointment by calling 1-833-GO-4-CURE, visiting www.biospecialty.com or sending an email to donors@biospecialty.com.

MBTA fare transformation program advances with approval of amendment | Staff Report | ital cost of the system and | account for future changes | easily and the elimination of | bust, thoughtful network of | and | upgrades | and | cannot

Stair Kepoi

On Monday, the MB-TA's Fiscal and Management Control Board approved a contract amendment regarding the Public Private Partnership agreement involving the T and the consortium Cubic I John Liang – rolling out the new fare collection system that has been anticipated since 2018.

This action marks a significant step toward implementing the revised transformative initiative approved by the Fiscal and Management Control Board (FMCB) in December 2019, locking in an achievable and enforceable schedule while procuring new technology that will that will allow the system to adapt to future changes in ridership and to implement new kinds of fare options.

The amended contract totals $935.4 million, including both the full capital cost of the system and a 10-year stream of operations and maintenance payments. Although this represents an increase of $212.1 million in project costs compared to the contract approved in 2018, the new fare collection system remains cost-effective and is projected to collect over $8 billion in fare revenue during its first ten years of operation.

This amendment, which strengthens the original 2018 AFC 2.0 contract, enables the MBTA to achieve all the original goals of the project under a new approach. Based on feedback from customers, advocates, and policy makers, the new approach will result in customer-focused upgrades to the existing and future systems. In addition, this board action reestablishes key milestones, includes new provisions that reduce the T's construction risks, and allows the system to account for future changes within the payment industry.

"Under this program reset, we'll be able to deliver one system that can be used across all modes that meets the needs of our customers today, and has the ability to adapt to future needs," said MBTA General Manager Steve Poftak. "Especially in light of recent changes to daily life caused by COVID-19, it's more important than ever to move toward a dynamic system with contactless options that can withstand major changes to conditions that would otherwise undermine a legacy system of fare collection.'

The amended contract is only one part of a comprehensive Fare Transformation initiative that will ensure that customers begin to see improvements in fare collection over the next year, including the ability to obtain CharlieCards more easily and the elimination of the cash/ticket surcharge in 2021, so that CharlieTicket and cash fares will be the same as CharlieCard fares. Under the phased approach and in the short term, Fare Transformation will result in improvements that include: •The ability to pay for a trip on all Zone 1A stations

er Rail Line with a Charlie-Card; •Deploying fare vending machines that dispense on the Fairmount Commut-

CharlieCards;
•All-door boarding on MBTA buses and surface

stops along the Green Line; •Integrating ferries and the entire Commuter Rail network into the CharlieCard system.

This amendment also allots more time for both testing and installation of the new system and customer migration. Working with stakeholders, the program reset establishes a more robust, thoughtful network of retail sales outlets and fare vending machines centered on the needs of T customers. In conjunction with that process, the MBTA has committed to a significant increase in the total number of vending machines to ensure adequate access.

"Critical to this project's

"Critical to this project's success is outreach, and the level of engagement we've received indicates just how important the future of MBTA fare collection is to our customers," said Ron Renaud, Chief Transformation Officer. "Thanks to the feedback, we are now on a course to provide improvements to our existing system, and ultimately, deliver a project that is even more focused on the needs of our customers."

While the MBTA's existing fare collection system collected approximately $671.7 million in FY19, the aging system requires substantial maintenance support the kinds of fare options that customers have requested.

The new technology pro-

The new technology provided by the Public Private Partnership offers reliability of equipment, readily accessible payment technology, and flexibility in fares and programs to further enhance access and equity for the MBTA ridership of the future.

In 2018, the FMCB authorized the original contract to include $356.8 million in payments for the capital cost of the new system and a ten-year stream of operations and maintenance payments totaling $366.5 million for a total cost of $723.3 million. The revised contract approved today includes $723.3 million for the capital cost and a reduced ten-year stream of $212.1 million in operations and maintenance payments, for a total of $935.4

SJC issues updated order regarding state court operations during the pandemic

The Supreme Judicial Court (SJC) on Monday issued an updated order, which will be effective May 4, 2020, regarding the operation of Massachusetts state courts and courthouses during the ongoing COVID-19 pandemic.

Under the new order, until at least June 1, 2020, all courts of the Commonwealth will continue to be open to conduct court business, but courthouses will continue to be closed to the general public, except where entry is required to address emergency matters that cannot be addressed virtually (by telephone, videoconference, email, or comparable means, or through the electronic filing system).

Jury trials in both criminal and civil cases in state courts are postponed to a date no earlier than July 1, 2020. All bench trials, in both criminal and civil cases are postponed to a date no earlier than June 1, unless they may be conducted virtually by agreement of the parties and of the court. The new order also extends various deadlines.

Monday's SJC order also directs Trial Court departments to identify categories of non-emergency matters that they will attempt to address virtually, where it is practicable to do so, and to provide clear guidance to the public and members of the bar regarding what those categories will be by posting periodic notices to the judiciary's COVID-19 webpage. The SJC and Appeals Court will continue to conduct oral arguments virtually in non-emergency matters.

All court clerks', registers', and recorder's offices shall continue to conduct court business -- to accept the filing of pleadings and other documents in emergency and identified non-emergency matters, to schedule and facilitate hearings, to issue orders, to answer questions from attorneys, litigants, and the general public, and to conduct other necessary business of the respective court. All such business will be conducted virtually, except when the filing of pleadings and other documents in emergency matters cannot be accomplished virtually.

MBTA's RIDE offering transit services to personal care attendants

The MBTA announced that the RIDE paratransit service will temporarily allow customers to book trips for their personal care attendants (PCAs) in an effort to best support their ADA-eligible customers during the COVID-19 situation.

"This change will also

"This change will allow the MBTA to maintain a vital link between RIDE customers and their PCAs," said MBTA General Manager Steve Poftak. "As we actively monitor the COVID-19 situation, we will continue to make necessary service changes that meet the travel needs of both those who are essential to combating this virus, and, where we can, the needs of those who are the most vulnerable among us."

A PCA is defined as an individual that provides assistance in performing Activities of Daily Living (ADLs). ADLs include, but are not limited to, mobility, bathing/grooming, dressing/undressing, passive range-of-motion exercises, taking medications, eating, and toileting. Allowing these bookings ensures that RIDE customers continue to receive the same level of daily support they need to live independent and safe

This update is in addition to other temporary RIDE measures already in effect meant to protect the health and safety of T workers and customers, and preserve services for those who must travel for essential purposes. Other temporary RIDE updates include the elimination of shared RIDE trips, temporarily extending RIDE eligibility and postponing eligibility appointments, adjustments to booking windows, updates to subscriptions, and a reduction in transfer trips. More information on these temporary updates can be found at mbta.com/theride.

In order to book travel for their PCA, RIDE customers should call the RIDE Access Center (TRAC) at 844-427-7433 and inform the agent that the trip is for their PCA. RIDE customers will need to provide the PCA's name, address, and service needs.

PCA trips may only be to or from the RIDE customer's home address. RIDE customers can pay for the PCA trip out of the RIDE customer's account with PCAs also able to deposit funds into a RIDE customer's account by calling 888-844-0355. The cost of the PCA trip is equal to traditional RIDE fares. Customers will receive their night-prior call back from the RIDE and customers should let their PCAs know of their pick-up time. Arrival notifications will also go to the customer's phone number.

RIDE service for customer trips will remain the priority. As such, trips for PCAs will be fulfilled only as capacity allows.

Doris Marion Carlino

Enjoyed a long career in concert

Doris Marion Carlino, a soprano who enjoyed a long career in concert, radio, and recordings, died peacefully on April 23 at Woodbriar Health Center in Wilmington, Massachusetts. She was 95.

She was born Doris Carpenter in Boston on July 3, 1924, to Orlando Carpenter and Florence (Parsons), both of whom were musical. She grew up in Everett, where she attended the public schools, graduating from Everett High School in 1941. She received her first piano lessons from her mother (age 9) and her first voice lessons from Ruth Streeter. She graduated St. Petersburg Junior College (Florida) in 1943. From there she enrolled as a voice major at the Conservatory of the College of the Pacific (now the University of the Pacific) in Stockton, California, graduating in 1949. Her most important coach and mentor at the Pacific was Felix Underwood, who taught her her first complete operatic roles. From 1951 to 1953, she was on the roster of the San Francisco Opera Company, where she made her solo debut in Puccini's "Suor Angelica" (September 26, 1952). Her most important mentor at SFOC was Kurt Herbert Adler, chorus master and later general manager. For 25 years (1961-1986), Ms. Marion lived in Europe, where she performed in opera and concert and made numerous recordings for the radio (a selection of which were compiled in 2000 on the AFKA compact disc, "Affections of My Heart"). In Nuremberg, she studied voice with Adolf Richter (former leading tenor at the Prague Opera House) and coached with Constantine Callinicos (Mario Lanza's former accompanist). In 1963, Ms. Marion married Bruno Droste (1918-1969), an important composer and conductor of light music in East Germany (about whose life Ms. Marion produced the 2012 documentary "Bruno Droste: an artist's flight to freedom").

She made three recordings of the "Hermit Songs" by Samuel Barber, who wrote her a letter complimenting her interpretation (1964). In 1964 Ms. Marion moved to Brussels, where she appeared frequently in recital for the French and Flemish radio, and on recordings for radio stations in Amsterdam, Frankfurt, Cologne, Nuremberg, and Berlin, and on television in Luxembourg. She collaborated with many prominent Belgian composers of the day, including Victor Legley and René Bernier (who called her "mon interprète"). Ms. Marion's most important coaches during her 22 years in Belgium were Frédéric Anspach, Madeleine Farrère, and Lira LeNoir. She had a long musical partnership with British-born pianist Pyta Shrager. In 1976 she married Italian tenor Tonino Carlino. In 1986, Ms. Marion returned to Everett, Massachusetts, where she continued to perform a wide variety of music, as well as teach and mentor a new generation of musicians.

Ms. Marion was the sister of Margery Warford, Muriel Roos, and the late June Semon; the step-mother of Sabrina Carlino; and the loving aunt of Garry, Jack, Kevin, and Shawn Warford: Donna Diane and Judy Roos; Marc, Kim, and Kirk Semon; and many grand-nephews and -nieces.

Marion Gale

The ultimate Revere Girl

Marion (Gould) Gale of Reading, formerly of Revere, died on April 24 at the age of 84.

Although her last few years were spent in Reading, Marion was the ultimate Revere Girl, born and raised. Known around town as the "Headband and Hat Lady" - she was the fashion-plate of Revere. Marion loved Revere and specifically, Revere Beach. Like an Official Historian, Marion would recount stories of her youth on Revere Beach - "The Nation's First Public Beach" she would say. She would pine about days and nights spent at the Revere Beach Amusement Park, Dancing at Wonderland Ballroom, and all the hilarious stories of the time spent with her cousins. She loved Kelly's Roast Beef and fulfilled a dream of living in a condo on Revere Beach.

It was at her condo on Revere Beach that her grandchildren will remember her best. She referred to them as her "Angels," and when they were babies, they would go to the beach all day and then back to her condo for a "baby powder" bath.

Her children will tell you they never had alot, but their mother never said "No" to friends coming over, and somehow she always had a "Magic can of Tuna" that could feed two to ten!

Marion was the classic Irish-Catholic lassie and always maintained an incredibly strong faith and relationship with God. We know she is with the Lord and her loving family members in Heaven, and we will miss her until we

Federal Judge postpones Exxon case in Everett, Chelsea

A federal judge in Boston logged a decision on March 23 to postpone the case against ExxonMobil's Everett terminal until the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) makes a ruling on the facility's discharge permit.

The only problem with that, said Conservation Law Foundation (CLF) President Brad Campbell, is such permits can take decades to be acted upon – thus rendering the case moot and residents potentially put at risk due to flooding and storm surges at the terminal.

Judge Mark Wolfe ruled on the matter March 23, which was at the outset of the COVID-19 pandemic.

"The judge ruled for a stay on the matter using a doctrine we think is not applicable to the case," said Campbell. "Essentially, the judge put a hold on the proceedings until EPA issues a new permit for the facility. That could take years and typically does take years. There are facilities in Massachusetts where permits have been waiting for action for 10 years or more...We respectfully disagree with the judge on the application of the law and will appeal

Everett Mayor Carlo De-Maria said he encouraged ExxonMobil to put a plan together to address the deficiencies at the terminal.

"As one of the most densely populated communities in the Commonwealth, we have continued to increase our city investment in enhancing, repairing and maintaining our storm drainage system," he said. "We have updated our storm water regulations, reduced parking requirements, passed a driveway ordinance and built rain gardens. Private businesses need to recognize the catastrophic consequences of ignoring climate change. They need to work with local municipalities to decrease the risks of damage when storms do occur and to move our economy forward while building climate resiliency."

ExxonMobil did not respond for comment.

CLF, along with several groups in Everett and Chelsea, filed the lawsuit on the basis that the Everett Terminal has no plan for coastal resiliency and is subject to flooding from sea level rise and coastal surge storms. In those events, Campbell said polluted waters are being discharged into the Island End River and the Mystic River and it is putting residents of the area at risk as Large coastal surge storms have also become worrisome to activists who believe the facility could be inundated and cause great catastrophe through the release of petroleum from the storage tanks.

Specifically, CLF's lawsuit alleges that ongoing spills and pollution at ExxonMobil's Everett Terminal and Exxon's failure to address current and imminent climate risks at the facility – risks its own scientists have warned of for decades - are unlawful under the federal Clean Water Act and the Resource Conservation and Recovery Act.

"We have known that frontline, low-income, communities of color like Chelsea, Everett and East Boston will be hit first and worst by climate events," said Roseann Bongiovanni, director of GreenRoots in Chelsea. "However, what we have learned through COVID-19 is that our communities are being hit worse than we once expected. The tsunami of environmental and public health insults have already caused lasting damage to our health and well-being. This court decision is infuriating and shows that environmental justice communities continue to be shouldered with ever-mounting burdens that make us even more vulner-

The timing of the decision is rather disappointing to those involved in the case, especially since it has been under review for several years and the decision was rendered during a pandemic state of emergency. That said, CLF welcomes the appeals process.

"It's languished on the docket and that's clearly disappointing because there are communities at risk, but we're looking forward to the 1st Circuit Court process and telling the story," Campbell said. "The wheels of justice unfortunately turn slowly and Judge Wolfe's order makes it even more important we continue the fight for the residents of Chelsea and Everett."

Everett Community Care Fund

"In the City of Everett, we are doing all we can to help local families and individuals who are being profoundly impacted by the COVID-19 virus. This includes working with United Way to raise and quickly deploy funds directly to people in our community who have lost income due to job loss or reduced work hours. These funds will be used to support food pantries, supplement rent payments, provide childcare and pay utility costs. For many Everett families and individuals, this fund will help prevent a health crisis from becoming a financial crisis. Please help us keep these families afloat with a donation to the Everett COVID-19 Care Fund. All proceeds (less credit card processing fees) will go directly to helping Everett families and individuals in need."

Sincerely, Mayor Carlo DeMaria
